

LETTER II.

On[%] of the modes of this ascendancy justly called Romantic, is, the unfounded persuasion of something peculiar and extraordinary in a person's destiny—This vain expectation may be relative to great talent and achievement, or to great felicity—Things ardently anticipated which not only cannot be attained, but would be unadapted to the nature and condition of man if they could—A that hoped to out-do rather than imitate Gregory Lopez, the hermit—Absurd expectations of parents—Utopian anticipations of philosophers—Practical absurdity of the age of chivalry—The extravagant and exclusive passion for what is grand.....p. m

LETTER III.

The epithet applicable to hopes and projects inconsistent with the known relations between ends and means—Reckoning on happy casualties—Musing on instances of good luck—Novels go more than half the length of the older Romance in, pro moting this pernicious tendency of the mind—Specimen of what they do in this way—Fancy magnifies the smallest means into an apparent competence to the greatest ends—This delusive calculation apt to be admitted in schemes of benevolence—Projects for civilizing savage nations—Extravagant expectations of the efficacy of direct instruction, in the lessons of education, and in preaching—Reformers apt to overrate the power of means—The fancy about the omnipo tence of truth—Our expectations ought to be limited by what we actually see and know of human nature—Estimate of that nature—Prevalence of passion and appetite against conviction.....p.
no

LETTER IV.

Christianity the grand appointed mean of reforming the world—But though the religion itself be a communication from heaven, the administration of it by human agents is to be considered as a merely human mean, excepting so far as a special divine energy is made to accompany it—Its comparatively small success proves in what an extremely limited measure that energy, as yet, accom panies it—Impotence of man to do what it leaves undone—Irrational to expect from its progressive administration a measure of success indefinitely surpassing the present state of its operations, till we see some signs of a great change in the Divine Government of the world—Folly of projects to reform mankind which disclaim Religion—Nothing in human nature to meet and give effect to the schemes and expedients of the moral revolutionist—"Wretched state of that nature—Sample of the absurd estimates of its condition by the irreligious members of society.....p.
132

LETTER V.

Melancholy reflections—No consolation amidst the mysterious economy but in an assurance that an infinitely good Being presides, and will at length open out a new moral world—Yet many moral projectors are solicitous to keep their schemes for the amendment of the world clear of any reference to the Almighty—Even good men are guilty of placing too much dependence on subordinate powers and agents—The representations in this Essay not intended to depreciate to nothing the worth and use of the whole stock of means, but to reduce them, and the effects to be expected from them, to a sober estimate—A humble thing to be a man—Inculcation of devout submission, and diligence, and prayer—Sublime quality and indefinite efficacy of this last, as a mean—Conclusion: briefly marking out a few general characters of sentiment and action, though very uncommon, to which appliedp.
139